Business 2.0 cites Rearden's Web-based personal assistant for its ability to help users find, purchase and manage a broad array of services including hotel and flight reservations, meetings, package shipping and many others. Already more than 200 companies and 500,000 employees use the Rearden Commerce Network.

"Rearden Commerce is putting the Web to work, helping people find, purchase and manage the services they need to get work done and helping companies more effectively control services spend," said Patrick Grady founder and CEO of Rearden Commerce. "It's gratifying to have Rearden's value proposition further validated by Business 2.0 and we're proud to be in the company of the other innovators in the Next Net 25."

"The reason we chose Rearden for this year's Next Net 25 is because of its ability to create a wide array of enterprise mashups for its corporate customers, and hide the complexity of what it is doing behind a simple Web interface," commented Erick Schonfeld, Business 2.0 Editor at Large.
